grade. Below are suggestions for accomplishing each of these tasks. 1. Before Reading the Papers.

Responding to Student Writing

The general comments explain my expectations and elaborate on how essays could be better. I say in my feedback that if my specific comments don't say anything about a particular aspect of the assignment, then the student should look to the general comments. This approach avoids the need to write the same comments on essay after essay.

When students get their essays back, they look at the number on the essay and its corresponding comment on the handout. You can use the numbers for holistic evaluation or for specific parts of the essay. This system works for formal essays, informal writing, timed writing, and test writing. You can make up your own comments or you can steal mine. The best thing about passing out the comments before the essay is due is that it becomes a student writing checklist.

There are two main types of comments you can offer your students: error correction and content/ideas critique. Content/ideas critique focuses on "what you write". These comments evaluate the student's ability to write a focused paper with support and a logical development of ideas. Error correction emphasizes "how you write".
