Technique #1: Off-Camera Flash as a fill light. Using the sun as backlighting is beautiful, but without another light source, you're either left with a underexposed subject or an overexposed background. Using an off-camera flash as a fill light lets you control just where the light is falling. Once your subject is set-up with the sun (or other main light source) to their back, experiment with different placements of the flash. Often, using a flash to the front and off to the side leaves ...
